THE COLON

KNOWING THE COLON

Most of the disorders begins in the intestinal tract, spreads through the blood to the skin and lymphatic glands and finally comes to invade deep tissues. The food within the gut, if not digested properly turns into tonic material, producing toxins that aggravate the bowel moods.

After a first digestion step the food moves into the colon where its digestion is completed and it is absorbed almost as vitamins and nutrients.

The colon creates the stool and absorbs water from the digested food.

It provides nourishment to the bacterias that play a beneficial role, because they are able to synthesize important vitamins and absorb nutrients. Any food, including fruit, starts rotting if kept long enough in the body.

The cause of retention of food remains within the colon is the presence of mucus.

Even a vegetarian diet in which you take dairy products, tofu, foods made from white flour leads to the production of mucus in the intestine.

The mucus produced in the colon will dry out and turn into a viscous substance which tends to retain within the colon remainings of the digested food.

If the mass of undigested materials accumulates, it begins to pass through the intestinal wall into the bloodstream.

The flow of blood then carries the putrefactive and fermentative toxins in every part of the body.

The immune system is forced to work really hard to neutralize the toxins that accumulate in the weakest points of the body.

These toxins in the colon can create the conditions for many dysfunctions and diseases.

AN ITALIAN HISTORY

It all started in the 1980s: years in which the Gnali family began producing items for gas and water.

The oldest ancestors were employed in the manufacture and engraving of arms, activities that gave way in the post-war period to the manufacturing of steel for the production of household and cutlery items.

Thanks to their ability to continually develop new technology and products via a specific company research and development department and the continual investments in production structures and human resources, over the course of the last 25 years, the activity has extended considerably.

Currently the production is based on the manufacturing of products for the control of water and gas, specifically, pressure reducing valves and brass fittings for water; pressure regulators, taps and small metal parts in brass or copper for gas.

The certification ISO 9001 to ensure the company quality along with the procedures outlined by the UNI CEI EN ISO/IEC 17025 on general requirements of the test laboratories adopted by the internal laboratory for the management and performance of technical research tests and tests on products, determines a further qualification of recognition.

The quality of materials used, the precision of the assembly processes and the test 100% guarantee the product to the end users.

All the company's strategic choices are aimed at the total safety, quality and precision of the products.

With over 30 years of experience and the ability to steadily acquire new skills relating to companies requiring high specialization, the Gnali Bocia Group anticipated new market demands, launching devices for the SECTOR of WELLNESS TO PEOPLE.

For this purpose, NATURLIFESTYLE was born in 2013, a company set up specifically to promote in the Italian and international use of portable systems for rectal/transanal / vaginal irrigation and hydrocolontherapy domestic and professional.
